

United Nations Day: Sayyid Ammar Al-Hakeem calls for a firm stance to address political, economic, and social issues around the globe

Sayyid Ammar Al-Hakeem, head of the National State Powers Alliance, called The Member States of the United Nations for a serious stance to address the political, social, and economic issues the world is undergoing.

His Eminence tweeted on Sunday, October 24, 2021, "United Nations Day is upon us this year and the world is suffering under many political, security, health, economic and social crises and turmoil that require all Member States to have a serious and firm stance to address them and limit their progress through constructive dialogue and practical steps."

His Eminence illustrated that our world, today, is in dire need of implementing the credible provisions of the approved international charters of the United Nations to be a testament in the light of the exacerbation of the scourge of terrorism, the escalation of hatred, the agendas of extremism, division, and sedition, as well as the growing area of poverty, so what we need today is the language of reason and logic and replace weapons with the values of peace, and disagreement with the meanings of harmony.
